The Imperial Royal Austrian Lace Industries

Located in the Austrian Empire, and under the direct supervision of the Austrian Government, where the art of lace-making is an old one among its peasantry, and one of which they might well boast. Until its control by the government, unscrupulous dealers would impose upon the peasanta by giving in exchange for Handmade Laces of extreme value articles of little worth, such as cooking intensils and similar household needs and farming implements. To correct these and other evils that entailed hardships upon the peasantry, the Imperial Government was compelled to incorporate the lace industries within its own sphere and under the department of Schools and Commerce. And so it remains to-day,

The development of the institution has led to the establishment of hundreds of school centers throughout the various principalities, with a normal school at Vienna.
